Advancing Worker Health and Safety

1

Accessing your feedback

Before you start work on creating your poster, please log into the online speaker center (submissions site) to view the feedback from reviewers and incorporate their suggested changes into the final poster.

To access, visit: <https://www.aievolution.com/aih2001/>
(Username is your first initial and last name, i.e. jdoe and your password can be email to you by clicking the "forgot password" option).

2

Poster Specifications

Your poster should include:

- The title of your accepted proposal
- Your name, any co-authors or mentors, your institution
- A description of research goals and methods
- A presentation of results
- A summary of major conclusions
- Future directions for the research
- A short bibliography or list of references
- Acknowledgments (citing any help received, mentors, or sources of funding)

3

Design Considerations

Use large, uncomplicated fonts

The print should be legible from at least three to four feet away

Convey your information with colorful images and figures

Balance your text and images

Use headings, numbers, white space, or color frames to organize the information

Think of reader "gravity"—how the viewer's eye tends to move from top to bottom and from left to right—and incorporate that flow into your design

4

Design Considerations

Include an abstract—a concise summary of your work, written in a way that makes the reader want to take the time to study your poster

Engage the reader by including an image, model, or photo in your introduction

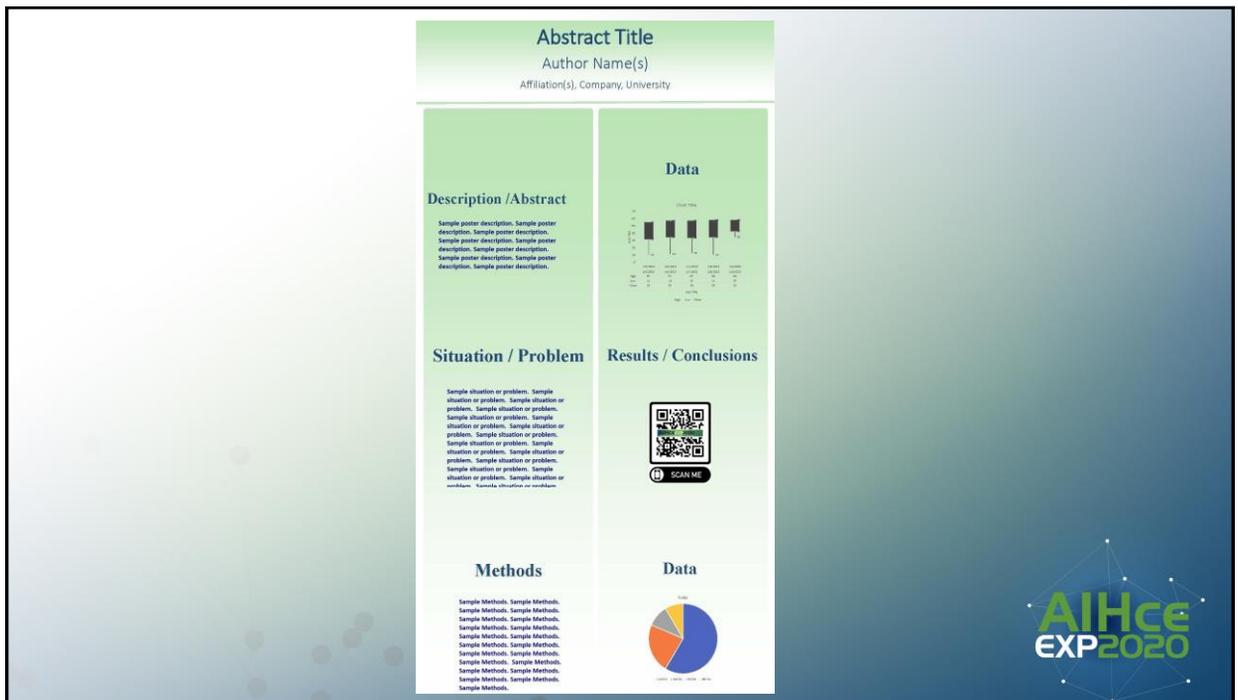

Communicate the methods used with a flow chart, figures, or process diagram and a concise description

Articulate the take away lessons in an understandable manner

While the poster serves as a visual aid while you talk, others may view it when you are not there

5

6

Including an Oral Presentation

Try incorporating a QR code into your poster!

The main job of a poster is to provide audiences information on your research, but it can be a tricky balancing act to provide attendees with all the details while creating something visually pleasing. As you will not be directly speaking to the viewers of your poster during an author attend time, using a QR code or link on your poster will allow viewers a place to go to view more details, without taking up space with numbers and words. QR codes can also be used to share your contact information, social media accounts, a YouTube video you've posted about your study, additional images, or links back to a website..

A screenshot of the AIHce EXP2020 website. The top navigation bar includes links for "Questions?", "Attend", "Virtual AIHce EXP", "Speak", "Exhibit", and "Register". A red arrow points to the "Speak" link. The main content area has a heading "Here you will find guidelines and suggestions to help you prepare and deliver a solid, visually stimulating, and informative presentation." Below this is a horizontal line and a note: "Click/tap the icon to access the resources and information you need." At the bottom of the main area are three icons: a green circle with a white checkmark, a yellow square with a white document icon, and an orange square with a white document icon. A red arrow points from the orange icon to the sidebar. The sidebar, titled "Speak", contains a list of resources: "Speaker Registration and Reservations", "PDC Presenter Resources", "Virtual Education Session Presenter Resources", "Poster Logistics and Guidelines" (with a close button 'x'), and "Helpful Hints for a Successful Presentation". Under "Poster Logistics and Guidelines", there are two bullet points: "Professional Poster Digital Display Submissions" and "Best in Show Student Poster Submissions".

Best in Show Awards

A panel of judges comprised of seasoned AIHA volunteers will select three winners: first place gold, second place silver, and third place bronze, as the "Best in Show" awards. Winners will each receive a certificate, monetary prize, and be featured in an issue of The Synergist after the conference.

Please visit the website for the rubric that will be used to judge your poster.

AIHA's technical committees will also judge student posters at their discretion, in consideration for specific committee awards in their designated content areas.

Winners will be determined by May 22.
